Intraoperative microscopic images of laparoscopic adrenalectomy by a newly designed lens. In laparoscopic adrenalectomy, the magnification of the operative field is not as adequate as in open adrenalectomy. The current magnification provided by the conventional laparoscopic surgical optics is insufficient for the detailed observation of small structures. It is difficult to achieve enough depth of field to observe the operative field and instruments for detailed operation. We developed a new surgical laparoscope equipped with a convex lens having a focal length of 25 mm and an angle of incidence of approximately 40 degrees to resolve these difficulties. With this laparoscope, intraoperative microscopic images of the operative field and the instruments were obtained. In laparoscopic adrenalectomy, intraoperative microscopic images enabled fine identification of the adrenal tumors, the excised adrenal glands, and the dissected vessels. This new laparoscope may be useful for microscopic observation of small structures during laparoscopic surgery, particularly in laparoscopic adrenalectomy.Q: Storing user settings using local storage I'm storing user preferences in local storage using javascript and I have it working to save a default setting for the browser. I have a button, when the user clicks it, it calls my function that updates local storage: function changeSettings() { localStorage.setItem("user", "true"); localStorage.setItem("savedLogins", ""); localStorage.setItem("showEmail", "true"); } When the user wants to change a setting he clicks a button (with the same function, changeSettings()) that replaces the value that is stored in localStorage with the user setting. 82157476af
